December 2006

Dear Friends,

When the history of this period is written, it may be said of those of us in this country alive at this time that, on our watch, the world went over the tipping point.

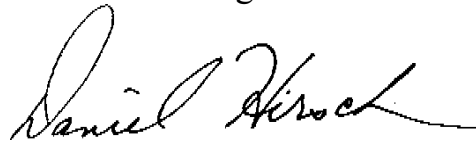

On global warming, nuclear weapons proliferation, terrorism and virtually endless war, the interminable legacies of nuclear waste and pollution—the last few years in particular may turn out to be the time of which future generations will ask: How could they have let it happen?

Nothing is inevitable, and nothing is completely irreversible.

But it is also true there are periods in history where the actions of dedicated people of conscience have prevented disasters or ended tragedies, and other times when people failed to act effectively, to devastating result.

Which will it be now?

With best wishes for a New Year
that is a Turning Point Toward Justice,
